It all began with a bomb hurled at a carriage in Muzaffarpur, Bihar, on 30 April 1908, by Khudiram Bose and Prafulla Chaki, two teenaged revolutionaries who would shake the British Empire to its core.

The Alipore Bomb Case: A Historic Pre-Independence Trial is an inspiring account of the revolutionary secret societies that formed the vanguard of India's independence movement. Guided and aided by intellectuals and spiritual stalwarts like Aurobindo Ghose and Lokmanya Bal Gangadhar Tilak, the nationalist movement sounded the bugle for a colonised India's determination to gain complete independence from the oppressive British rule.

A fast-paced and informative read, The Alipore Bomb Case: A Historic Pre-Independence Trial recreates, through a narrative relayed by extracts of the actual trial, a crucial chapter of India's independence movement.

Noorul Hoda is actively involved in historical and cultural research projects in India. The Alipore Bomb Case: A Historic Pre-Independence Trial is the result of his ongoing research on revolutionary groups of the Indian freedom movement.

A man of many interests, Hoda has been instrumental in setting up unique museums and archives across India.
